50 Greyskull Approved Conditioning Workouts for the Modern Viking

by John Sheaffer
aka Johnny Pain
Introduction

This book has been created out of a growing number of requests for “Greyskull Approved” conditioning drills. I have written and spoken at length about the trend in existence today for people to “condition for the sake of conditioning”. I am a firm believer in having your conditioning work fit your individual goals. I believe that sports competitors are best suited by practicing their sport as their primary “conditioning”. Strength training needs to form the base of any solid strength and conditioning program. It is going to have the biggest global effect on one’s ability to perform well at a given task.

The workouts presented in this book are designed to accompany a solid strength training program, not to take the place of one. That being said, these workouts are ones that I feel “make sense” for someone looking to get in all around better “shape” get their “wind up” and to use in conjunction with a well designed and implemented strength training program and diet to bring about a more favorable body composition, i.e. not be a lard ass.

Most would be well suited to apply my ten-minute rule to the workouts in this book. If the drill will take you longer than ten minutes to complete, then record what you are able to get done in that amount of time, and try to accomplish more on the next attempt (This obviously applies to those workouts that feature a set amount of work for you to get through). Once you can complete it all in ten minutes, then work on progressively bringing the time down. I want you to work very hard for a sustained period of time. One’s ability to perform with the amount of intensity I like to see and have found to be necessary to bring about the types of progress that people want from their training begins to diminish rapidly after the ten-minute mark in my experience. This also brings up the age-old question of whether one would rather look like a sprinter or a marathon runner. Most will inevitably say they’d rather look like the sprinter (at least most who will read this book) however many still possess the antiquated belief that fat loss and conditioning both are best influenced by long, slow type efforts much more akin to the activities of the marathoner as opposed to the sprinter.

Each of these workouts is currently used or has been used in the past by members here at Greyskull and/or by consult clients of mine training around the world. There isn’t anything in this book that isn’t suitable, in my opinion, for anyone looking to become more vikingsesque and dramatically improve their pillaging game. They are not presented in any particular order, and I encourage you to use this book as a “recipe book” of sorts to help lay out your training. Plan ahead or pick one and go, doesn’t matter to me. Just be sure you’re keeping a good record to track your progress (progress is key) and that you are giving it your all and not leaving anything in the tank.

Without further adieu, 50 Greyskull Approved Conditioning Workouts for the Modern Viking...
#1 “13 Down” Kettlebell Swing/ Burpee Ladder

This is timeless classic. This workout has been used here at Greyskull as much as any other workout in this book.

It’s very simple. Swing a moderately weighted Kettlebell 13 times and the immediately perform 13 burpees. Repeat this process with each number from 13 down to 1. Record your time and come back and smash it next time.

This works out to 91 repetitions of each movement. If you know going into it that this one is a bit out of your league at the moment duck the number down that you begin the ladder from.

Enjoy.
#2 The 100m Repeat

This one is very near and dear to me, and remains one of my favorites for both general conditioning, and as a high intensity tool to accelerate fat loss. It is very simple, head to the track, find the 100m marks, or just use the straightaway portion of the track if you’re unsure about the markings. After warming up thoroughly, sprint the 100m as hard as possible. After you cross the line turn it around and walk or lightly jog back to the beginning. As soon as you hit the starting line turn it around and burn down the straightaway again. Repeat as many times as desired.

This one allows you to progress in two ways. The first is by building up the number of efforts. I normally will start people out with 5 or 6 and eventually work them up to 10. Additionally, you should be using your stopwatch to time each effort and give it everything you got to beat your time on successive sprints. It is normal for your time to increase a bit with each effort due to fatigue, but nut up and do everything you can to combat this. Dig deep and try to beat your previous time on each sprint.

When you can do 10 of these keeping your times within one second of each other with an honest all out effort on each, you’ll be pretty badass, and I bet you’ll be a bit happier with your body composition.

As a note, Florence Griffith-Joyner did the 100m in 10.49 in 1988, so be humbled and get after it trying to run down FloJo.
#3 Sandbag Shoulder and Squat x 50

We’re going to once again enlist the help of our trusty sandbag for this one. It is simple. Start with the bag on the ground in front of you facing “perpendicular” to your feet (as shown below). Bend down and grasp the bag at by its sides, and hoist it up in a powerful motion to one shoulder. Once it has settled on the shoulder, execute a full squat. Stand completely, and bring the bag back down to touch the ground. No need to set it all the way down, just touch the ground and “shoulder” the bag to the opposite side before knocking out another squat. One shoulder and one squat equal one rep. Get through 50 of these as fast as you can.

The beastly will opt for the heavier (80lb) bag on this one.

One hell of a bag handler.
#4 10 Clapping Pushups/ 40 yd Shuttle

Knock out ten clapping Pushups then sprint to a point 40 yds out and back, repeat.

This one can be done one of two ways. The first is to set a number of sets to complete and strive to beat your time each time you complete the workout. The second and perhaps nastier alternative is to work to time, meaning knock as many sets of this beast as you can get done in ten minutes. Either option will leave you gasping for air and hating life for some time.

This one is a bit more advanced due to the use of the clapping pushup. These aren’t easy to perform until you can knock out quite a few pushups with ease (even then they are still a bitch). The obvious answer here is to use an alternative pushup such as a standard or feet elevated pushup to temper the difficulty a bit if this one is presently out of your league. It is also acceptable to begin with clapping pushups and switch to easier versions as you get into the latter sets (just be honest in your record keeping so you have accurate data).

Leave it all on the field on this one.

#5 The Sandbag Half Mile

(See Appendix A for a tutorial on how we make our sandbags)

Here we’re going to use our Sandbag we made again. This one is terribly simple. Cover one half mile on the road or track as fast as possible carrying the sandbag however you like. Run Forrest!

This is a gut check, the nutless need not apply. Set record, beat record, and repeat. Like I always say, this stuff is simple but not easy.

An awfully dark tan for the dead of winter.
This one has been a Greyskull staple for years now. Grab a Kettlebell (50lb or heavier for men, 35lb or heavier for women) or Dumbbell and perform 200 good swings as quickly as possible breaking as infrequently as you can. Work up to progressively heavier weights as you go.

Less than 10 minutes with a 70lb bell is a decent goal to shoot for.

Use your head here, I don’t want this taking 30 minutes. If you are behind the curve a bit in the conditioning department start with a lighter bell or halve the number of swings. Keep it short; don’t let it exceed 15 minutes or so.

For a really good time, do this one as a finisher after your deadlift workout.
#7 The Sledgehammer Tabata

Get yourself a 10lb or Heavier Sledgehammer and a used tire. Swing the hammer and smash the tire as hard as possible as many times as you can in 20 seconds, rest 10 seconds, and repeat, switching hands each 20 second round. Complete 8 total rounds (4 minutes).

Score yourself based on the lowest number of swings on the tire you got during any of the 8 20 second rounds.

A score of 15 with a heavy hammer is pretty damn good.

Bony in rare form on the giving end of a Hammering.
The Sandbag Clean and Press x 50

Clean your Sandbag from the ground to shoulder level and press it overhead 50 times as fast as possible.

Duck the reps down on this one if you need to. Avoid the marathon session; if you can’t rip through this one in a few minutes reduce the number of reps. Cap the session at 10 minutes and record whatever you have done at that point. Build up to fifty in less than 10 minutes and then work on bringing your time down.

#9 15 Tuck Jumps/ 15 Sit ups x 10

Perform 15 tuck jumps followed immediately by 15 situps and repeat ten times.

This one has existed in many incarnations for sometime here at Greyskull, a total gut check. This is one of those great hotel room (or jail cell depending on your lifestyle) workouts that can be done in virtually no space just about anywhere.

Make sure you are getting your knees up high to your chest on the tuck jumps, most have a tendency to degenerate the movement to a mule kick-like hop sort of thing as time goes on and the suck really starts to set in.

The feet can be anchored on the situps if you wish, but it is not necessary. From experience, grass is the most forgiving surface to do high rep situps on.

Our ten-minute rule should be in effect on this one. If you can’t complete it in that amount of time, do as many sets as you can, record it, and beat it on a later date.

Try to keep your lunch down on this one; those nutrients are necessary, hang on to them.

Bony could teach Buffalo Bill a thing or two about “the tuck”.
Snatch a Dumbbell (50lb or heavier for a male, 25lb or heavier for a female) as many times as possible in 10 minutes switching hands as frequently as needed.

This one is modeled off of the famed Secret Service Snatch test. The SSST is completed using a kettlebell (53lb/m, 26lb/f) though, and we are using a dumbbell here. The reason for this is simplicity. The dumbbell snatch is an easier movement to perform from a technique standpoint. The kettlebell snatch can certainly be self taught, and I highly encourage learning the movement, however in my experience almost everyone can snatch a dumbbell with acceptable technique on the first try while the kettlebell version really challenges some early on. This combined with the nasty effects that high rep kettlebell snatches can have on the skin of the hands (we don’t need blisters and tears jacking up our strength training progress or our Swayze style clay pot making) lead me to recommend the dumbbell version in this book.

Obviously if you are familiar and proficient with the KB version, have at it.

A passing score for the SSST is 200 snatches. See what you can do. Who’s got 250?

The Dumbbell Snatch. Obvious puns being avoided here, I’m an artist.
#11 100yd Dash / Goal line Walking Lunges x 4

Hit the football field for this one. Begin at the sideline on the goal line and sprint to the opposite end zone. When you get there, turn, walking lunge to the opposite sideline and sprint back to the goal line where you began (this time up the opposite sideline). Do this four times, circling the field twice, and ending up back where you began.

Haul ass on this one. Establish a time and beat it. Add sets of two (one complete circle around the field) if desired once you are in stud territory, just keep it so that you don’t have to slow down dramatically to finish the effort. You want to be blasting from start to finish on this one.

Make sure you’re maintaining an upright torso on the walking lunges, and taking nice, long, even strides. Take your knee all the way to the ground (it’s ok to touch it, it’s a football field not blacktop). Don’t cheat on these, do them right and make ’em count.
#12 10 minutes - 30 Seconds On/Off: High Knees/Situps

Here’s another great hotel room one that is quick and nasty. Set a clock to beep at 30 second intervals, or just watch your $5 stopwatch and alternate between high knees (running in place while pumping your knees high) and sit-ups, performing 30 seconds of each with no break in between, transition from one movement to the other as rapidly as possible.

Count your repetitions on the sit-up and try to maintain a decent level of consistency from minute to minute. A low number of 20 means you did pretty damn good.

Herschel Walker would be proud.
#13 50 Sandbag Burpees

These simple, evil ones are always my favorite.

Get your sandbag; place it on the ground in front of you. Get down on the bag as you would in a burpee, and bring it up with you on the way. Finish by pressing over your head. Repeat for a total of 50 reps.

Your hands remain on the bag throughout the event after the first rep.

If you can’t make 50 in the ten-minute window, record your reps and come back and beat them next time. Once you can hang, work on bringing down your time.

5 minutes on this one is pretty studly.
#14 400m dash, 75 Pushups, 400m dash, 75 Situps, 400m dash

This is a great one for the track or for your measured 200m turn around road point. Hit the 400m as fast as humanly possible then knockout 75 good pushups (no cheating reps) before blasting another 400. When you come in from that one, rep out 75 situps and then hit one last side stitch inducing, gut wrenching 400.

This will take all but the most beastly individuals out past the 10 minute mark. That’s ok. This is a good Spring/Summer Saturday morning one. If you can take the lack of variety for a bit, try dedicating 4 weeks of Saturdays to really improving your time on this one.

You will be happy with the results.
#15 50yd sprint / 25 Tuck Jumps / 50yd Bear Crawl x 6

Hit the football field for this one. Begin at the goal line and sprint like hell to the 50yd line. Once you are there bang out 25 tuck jumps, making sure you’re bringing your knees up towards your chest as high as you can on each jump and not letting the movement degenerate into a hop with a slight mule kick. Once you’re through the tuck jumps, get down and bear crawl it the rest of the way to the opposite goal line from where you started. Turn around and repeat for a total of six trips downfield.

This one is fun and has a grade school gym class feel to it. Enjoy the variety.

This is another one that will push many out past 10 minutes if you’re not a stud yet. That’s fine. Dedicate some time to bringing down your time if need be. Remember, any of these can be done for several workouts in a row. Setting a goal and sticking to it is always a good idea.
#16 5 Pushups, 5 Hanging Leg Raise Max Sets in 7 minutes

You’ll need a pull up bar that you can jump and grab on this one. Start your stopwatch or set a countdown timer for ten minutes. Bust out five solid pushups and then hit the pull up bar. Pause to make your body still if need be (no swinging) and bring your knees high up into your chest. Drop down from the bar and repeat the process. That completes one set. Knock out as many sets as you can in 7 minutes.

More advanced individuals might keep their legs extended on the leg raise portion or even bring their toes up to touch the bar which puts another evil and exciting spin on things. This is not about speed at the expense of quality movements. Make sure you’re not wildly swinging on the bar and that you’re doing a smooth knee or leg raise on each repetition.
#17 10 Bodyweight Squats, 2 Greyskull Grinders Max sets in 10 minutes

For this one you will need a pull up bar. Here we will use two movements, a simple unloaded, bodyweight squat, and the devastating Greyskull favorite the Grinder. Start your stopwatch or set a countdown timer for ten minutes and bust out ten good bodyweight squats, making sure to get proper depth on each (hips below knees), then jump to the pull up bar and bust out two grinders. The grinder is performed by executing a basic chin up, returning to the bottom, dead hang position, and then executing a hanging knee or leg raise. Make both movements distinct and high quality. Flailing or swinging the reps is unacceptable.

This is a gut buster. Tough it out and set a record to beat later.
Load a barbell with a moderate weight. Remember we aren’t trying to strength train here, so make sure the loads used will allow you to complete all of the reps of each set without needing to set the bar down (though I should add that this certainly should not be an easy weight). Add weight gradually once the criteria is met and times improve over a series of workouts.

Begin with the barbell in the “hang” position. Power Clean the bar to your shoulders and then perform 3 push presses. That completes one rep. Return the bar to the hang position for the start of the second rep. 5 reps makes one set. We’re doing 5 sets here.

Rest one minute in between sets. Score yourself based on the time it takes to complete your slowest set.
#19 Barbell Hang Power Snatch x 2 + Overhead Lunge

Begin with a barbell in the hang position. Perform a power snatch and return the bar to the hang position. From there execute a second power snatch and then leave the bar overhead. With the bar supported overhead, perform a lunge step forward with the left leg, return it, and then perform a lunge step forward with the right leg. That completes one repetition of the complex. Bust out five reps before setting the bar down.

Time yourself on each set and rest one minute in between sets.

Pick a manageable weight that will let you perform an uninterrupted set of five of this complex. This might take a little playing around to get right the first time. Like all barbell complexes, we aim to very slowly increase the weight used as well as bring down the time it takes to complete the workout.
#20 40 Burpee Grinders

Grueling and nasty is the only way to describe this one. Work it down to an impressive time and you will surely be a beast.

As the name suggests, this is simply a combination Burpee/ Greyskull Grinder. Complete a burpee, but jump and catch the pull up bar at the top of the movement. Make your body still in the dead hang position and then execute a chin-up. Return to the bottom, dead hang position, and then raise your knees (or your extended legs if you dare) as high as you can. That’s one.

Do forty of these as fast as possible without sacrificing quality for speed.
#21 5 Burpees/ 10 Pushups x 10

Quick, simple, and to the point, this one is often used here as a finisher and is used by many as a “get it in” type of thing when time is short and they want a fast, effective, stimulus for the day.

Do five burpees then ten pushups (one set) ten times. Record your time and call it a day.

Duck down the number of sets if need be. This one shouldn’t be a long, painful bastard. Short and nasty is the word here.
#22 Road Mile Stop Sign Run

Suburbanites take notice, this one’s for you.

This one is a simple and timeless old favorite here. This was one of the more common workouts done here in the very early days of Greyskull.

Scout out a one-mile course on the road through a neighborhood if geography allows. Run the course as fast as possible stopping at each stop sign to perform five of one of the following exercises:

- Bodyweight Squat
- Pushup
- Burpee

Only do one exercise per stop sign and rotate through them as you go. The order isn’t important, just keep cycling through them as you run.

Run the same course each time and time the entire thing. Philadelphia winters make this one especially fun.
#23 Broad Jump Burpee/ Dumbbell Hang Clean and Press 5 x 6/6

Perform a burpee and then execute a forward leap as far as possible during the jump portion. Turn and face the direction you started and repeat the process from the beginning, leaving you back at the same point you began. Each jump marks the end of one repetition. Complete six repetitions and then grab hold of two heavy dumbbells (don’t be a pussy on these). Clean the dumbbells to your shoulders and then press them overhead. That is one repetition. Return the Dumbbells to the hang position and knock out five more for a total of six repetitions. Six and Six equals one set. Rip through five of these as fast as you can.

I used to do these a lot with my clients and would put a nasty spin on things. At the beginning of the session I would ask them to broad jump for me. I would then mark the point to which they jumped, normally after they tried three or four times to get as far as possible (gotta love the competitive nature of people). I would purposely mark their landing point a few inches short of where they had actually landed. This would be met with serious resistance and they would insist that they had jumped farther. I would say “Ok” and then replace the mark to where they indicated. After this process was complete I would fill them in on what they would be doing and then let them know that any rep that they did not jump past their mark did not count.

Man did they dislike me for that. Kept them honest though. Try it. No need to trick yourself, just make a line to cross with your jumps and hold yourself accountable for the distance.

#24 Tabata Front Squat

This one I have to attribute to Dan John. This was my first introduction to the Tabata method several years ago, and remains one of my favorite short, intense conditioning workouts and also, in my opinion, one of the nastiest activities a human can put themselves through.

It is incredibly simple; clean a barbell to your shoulders to the “rack position”. Start a clock or set an interval timer to beep Tabata style (at 20 second/ 10 second intervals). Front Squat the barbell as many times as you can in the 20 seconds and then rest (still holding the bar) for 10 seconds. The effectiveness of this one decreases, in my opinion, if you attempt to use too heavy of a weight. I would not recommend exceeding 65-75lbs no matter how much of a badass you are.

As with any Tabata, your score is the lowest number of repetitions you complete during any of the eight 20 second periods.

After you complete this one, curse Dan John and then drop him a thank you.
25 Barbell Waiter’s Walk Half Mile

This one will give you a newfound understanding of the function of your abdominal muscles in stabilizing a load overhead. It will also help develop tremendous strength and stability in the whole shoulder girdle. I have long been a big fan of the Waiter’s Walk.

Execution is straightforward, pick up a barbell, press it overhead, and cover one half mile as rapidly as possible.

The trick here is selecting a weight that challenges you, yet is not so heavy that holding the bar overhead becomes a more difficult task than traversing the distance. If you have to stop frequently to set down the bar, you are using too much weight. Fast and nasty is the rule here.

Enjoy the sore abs you’ll get from this one. Be prepared if you’ve never done this before.
#26 Dumbbell Squat/ Press/ Squat and Press x 5/5/5
Max Sets in 7 minutes

An old favorite; Begin with two moderately weighted dumbbells held at your shoulders as if you were going to press them. Start a 7 minute clock and perform 5 squats holding the bells, followed by 5 presses (a push is OK), followed by 5 Squat and Presses (what some will call “Thrusters”) as many times as possible before time runs out.

Don’t go too heavy on the dumbbells here, this is conditioning, not strength training. If you need to set the bells down frequently, or have difficulty getting them locked out over your head on any of the reps then you need to reduce the weight.

This is just awful.
There are many different incarnations of this dumbbell complex. The version described below is the version we’ve used at Greyskull for several years now.

The Manmaker is performed by holding two dumbbells in your hands, placing them on the ground in front of you, assuming a “plank” or pushup position with your hands on the bells, rowing the left bell up along side your chest while keeping your body from twisting excessively, returning the bell, executing a pushup, rowing the right bell, returning it, then jumping your feet up between the bells as in the burpee, and lastly, “cleaning” the bells to your shoulders and performing a press.

This one is tough to beat as a total body smoker of a conditioning tool. Keep the weights light, I wouldn’t suggest more than 35lbs for even the toughest of tough guys.

Rip through 50 of these bad boys as fast as possible. As with other drills in this book, if you cannot complete all 50 in less than 10 minutes, record the number of repetitions you have completed and then beat that number next time. Once you break the ten-minute mark, work on bringing down your time.

#28 25 Dumbbell Overhead Walking Lunge/ 25 Tuck Jumps x 4

Awful. Bony used to lose it on this one every time.

Quick story: once he and I did this one in the original backyard Greyskull. In true Bony fashion he began heaving about 3 sets into it. While heaving he noticed that he had stepped in dog shit, at which point his heaving became more intense. Again, in true Bony fashion, he removed his shoe and began hopping on his other foot (still retching) only to lose his balance and set his foot (the one now only in a sock) down in the very same dog shit he had stepped in with his shoe on.

Hold a heavy dumbbell (or kettlebell) overhead with one arm. Complete 25 walking lunge steps, counting each step as one, set the dumbbell down, and bust out 25 good tuck jumps. Bring your knees high to your chest on each rep and stay as upright as possible. Pick up the dumbbell in the hand opposite the one you used for the first set and do the same. Switch hands two more times for a total of 4 sets.

Simple, not easy.
Great Dumbbell Workout here. Pick a pair of bells that represent a challenge but aren’t too heavy for this one. I wouldn’t exceed about 40lbs even for the super studs.

Assume the pushup position holding the bells in your hands. Execute a pushup and then row the left dumbbell up alongside your chest without twisting your body to the side. Twisting is fruity, don’t do it. That counts as one repetition. With the bell back on the ground, perform another pushup and then row with the opposite arm. Two down. Continue out a set of ten. When you have completed ten pushup/rows, assume a sit-up position with the bells held out over your chest, arms extended, as if you were about to do a floor press. Sit-up, allowing your arms to travel as needed in order to keep the bells locked out. In the top position of the sit-up, your arms will be extended over your head as if you just completed a dumbbell press. Knock out 10 of those to finish one set of the complex.

Take down 5 sets of this killer and call it a day. Come back and beat your time another day.

#30 (Burpee x 20 / 50 yd Shuttle) x 4

Back to the football field for this one. Stand on the goal line and knock out 20 burpees as fast as possible. When you’ve hit 20, sprint like hell out to the 50 yd line and back. Repeat 3 more times for a total of 4 sets.

Less than 5 minutes is damn good.
#31 400m Sprint, 100 KB Swings, 400m Sprint

Pretty Straightforward, hit the track or measure out a 400m course on the road. Sprint the 400m, immediately pick up the Kettlebell (or Dumbbell) and perform 100 swings, then it’s back to the track or course for one last hard 400m. Record your time for the day and beat it on the next effort.

Get it done and call it a day. This one is nasty.
#32 Sandbag Getup x 30

Bring out the bag for this one.

Lie down on your back and place the bag on your chest, favoring one side (as shown). While holding the bag as if you’d just “shouldered” it, get up to your feet. Once you are standing, reverse the process and head back down to the supine position. While on the ground switch sides with the bag and complete the process. Alternate sides on each repetition for a total of 30 reps.

Blaze through this one, record your time, and call it a day.

Studs, use the heavy bag or tack on an additional 10 or 20 reps.
#33 5 Gladiator Pushup / 5 Dumbbell Burpee x 10

This one will require two dumbbells on the fairly heavy side. The Gladiator Pushup will be the weak link, so use a weight that allows you to complete the required reps of that exercise but presents a pretty significant challenge. We don’t want this one to be too easy (evil laughter).

Begin with your hands on the dumbbells in the pushup position as shown. Execute a pushup and then using your midsection to hold everything tight, turn and pick up the dumbbell and extend it upward in the air forming a “T” position against the ground (see picture, this one is really hard to explain in words). Replace the bell to the ground and repeat with the other side. Each side counts as one rep (start each set on the arm opposite the arm you started the previous set with). Once you have knocked out five of these devilish bastards, perform five dumbbell burpees by jumping your feet between the bells, bringing them to your shoulders, and pressing them overhead.

Rip through ten sets of this monster and then go seek comfort somewhere warm.

#34 Front, Back, GO!

This is one holds a special place in my memory. This was a favorite conditioning and punishment tool used by various superiors at different points in my military career. The concept is simple. “Front” means pushups, “Back” means flutter kicks, lying flat on your back (hands under your butt is acceptable) and kicking your outstretched legs in an alternating fashion from a point roughly 6” off the ground, and “GO!” means run in place (high knees).

Setting this one up as a conditioning workout can be done a few ways. You can set a timer to beep at various intervals, signaling a fast transition to another movement, you can go of a stopwatch, changing at predetermined time hacks for a set period of time, or you can do it in it’s best incarnation, as a partner assisted exercise with your partner calling the commands at random time intervals for a set period of time. I’ll leave this one up to you.

I can still hear the sound of “On your belly, on your back, on your feet” being sung to the tune of “If you’re happy and you know it” playing in my head thinking about my good times with this one.
#35 IMT, “I’m up, He sees me, I’m down!”

In keeping with our theme here after Front, Back, GO! I’ll share another one that any of you military people will certainly have fond memories of I am sure. This one is the practice of “IMT”, Individual Movement Techniques. This is accomplished by sprinting, getting down in the prone position, popping up, sprinting, and repeating the process ad nauseam. The intent here is covering ground on the enemy while minimizing your exposure to enemy fire. The mantra “I’m up, he sees me, I’m down” is played in your head during each of your efforts. The idea is to be back down in the prone before the enemy has time to effectively aim and fire at you.

I’ve used this one for years with clients. Females in particular love this one for some reason. In those cases I announce the trips to the prone with “GO!” or whistle blows. This one can easily be done with a little discipline on your own. Any terrain will work, though a few trips across a nice open field will leave you better conditioned than when you start and with a feeling of general badassness.

When you finish this one thank a Vet.
#36 400m Walking Lunge/ 400m Dash

Hit the track or your measured 400m-road course for this one. This is pretty straightforward, complete one lap around the track by walking lunge, keeping your torso as upright as possible and dropping (not slamming) your knee to touch the ground on each step, immediately followed by a balls out sprint lap.

No need for more distance here. This doesn’t sound like much, but it sure is nasty. Be honest on the walking lunges and leave nothing in the tank on the sprint. The urge to cruise, and take it easy on that lap will be high, fight it and make it the hardest quarter mile you’ve ever run.

You’ll have nightmares about this one.
#37 Kettlebell Swing, Swing, Catch, Goblet Squat x 50

Fun stuff here. Grab a moderately heavy kettlebell and swing it to eye level. On the second swing, catch the bell in the goblet position as shown. Holding the bell in this position perform a squat. At the top of the squat, push the bell out and catch it, going into the swing to start the second rep of this ball buster.

Rip through 50 of these as fast you can. There is a certain rhythm to this one. It’ll take a bit of practice to get the groove just right unless you are a born dancer like myself.
#38 5 Mountain Climbers + 1 Burpee x 25

Quick, nasty, and effective, this one will give you iron lungs for sure.

Bust out five mountain climbers, holding your body in the pushup position, and bringing your knees up to your chest or higher in an alternating fashion (as shown). One left plus one right equals one repetition. Upon completion of the fifth mountain climber, jump to your feet and then leave the ground, burpee style. From the jump, immediately hit the deck and begin on another set of mountain climbers. Five mountain climbers plus one burpee equals one set. Twenty-five is the task here.

If you’re a stud, feeling ballsy, and only take a few minutes to knock this out, wait a minute or two and then repeat the process for a second set.

Yeah, I called you out.
15 Dumbbell Snatches, 10 Overhead Walking Lunges
Max Sets in 10 minutes

Set your countdown timer or start your stopwatch. Pick up a moderately heavy dumbbell (remember, it’s too heavy if you can’t keep moving with it and need to frequently set it down) and Snatch it 15 times with one arm. Upon completing the 15th rep, keep the bell locked out overhead and execute 10 walking lunge steps, counting each step as one. When you finish, switch hands and repeat. Do this as many times as possible in your ten minute window.

You’ll certainly call me everything but a good guy for this one.
#40 Truck Pushes

Ok, this one is beyond simple. Distance, rest between trips, and number of trips will vary greatly based on your individual situation, but the gist here is to throw your truck (or car) in neutral and push the hell out of it.

That’s all I have to say about that. Have fun with this one.
Kettlebell Turkish Get Up + 3 Snatches + 3 Overhead Squats, Max Reps in 7 minutes

You’ll need a moderately weighted kettlebell for this one, though a dumbbell will also work. Begin by laying flat on your back with the bell extended out in front of you. Keeping the bell at arm’s length, get to your feet with the bell pressed out overhead. Once you’re there, knock out three snatches followed by three overhead squats. That represents one repetition. Set a seven-minute timer and bust out as many reps as you can before the buzzer, alternating sides each time.

#42 150 Jump Squats

 Doesn’t get any simpler than this. This one is for when you are seriously pressed for time, have no equipment, and just want to get something in for the day. This reminds one of my former stay at home mom clients who would have go-to conditioning workouts she could do based on how many minutes she had in between events with her young kids.

 Squat to depth, come up, leave the ground by a few inches on each rep, repeat 150 times as fast as possible. That’s it.
#43 10 yd Bear Crawl Shuttle, 40 yd Shuttle Max Reps in 5 minutes (2 rounds)

Hit the football field for this one. Begin on the goal line and bear crawl out to the 10 yd line and back. Once you get back to the goal line, turn and sprint out to the 40 yd line and back. The above represents one repetition. Set a five-minute clock and blast through as many of these as you can before you run out of time. Once you’re through, take a two-minute break and get back at it for a second time.

Record your score and come back gunning for it another time.
#44 10 yd Dumbbell Bear Crawl, 10 Pushup/Row x 6

Here’s one that’s deceptively nasty. Mark out a ten-yard course and get yourself two moderately weighted dumbbells (again, you want to be able to perform the movements without stopping because the bells are too heavy). Holding the dumbbells, bear crawl out to your mark and then bang out ten pushup/rows, counting each row as a repetition (not one left plus one right equals one). Repeat five more times for a total of six sets.

Studs, if you’re cruising on this one (much less than ten minutes) make the bells a bit heavier or add sets in groups of two.
#45 Descending Ladder from 9: Dumbbell Squat and Press/ Windshield Wiper

Get a pair of heavy-ish dumbbells. Pull up a spot near a chinning bar where you can execute your windshield wipers. Squat and Press the dumbbells for nine repetitions and then hop to the bar and perform nine windshield wipers (see photos for demonstration). Work your way down to one doing equal numbers of each movement. Make the reps high quality on the wipers, be honest with yourself. If these are out of your league at the moment, simulate the side-to-side motion of the windshield wiper at the top of a hanging knee raise.

Awful, just awful.
#46 100m Sandbag Waiters’ Walk/ 35 Sandbag Squats x 4

Back on the bag for this one. Hoist it overhead and walk, arms extended for 100m. When you arrive at your mark, hold the bag in any manner you want and bust out 35 good squats. Turn around and repeat for a total of four trips.

Short and intense, keep it simple.
#47 400m Sandbag Waiters’ Walk with 1 Sandbag Burpee Every Ten Steps

You’ll need your sandbag for this one, and a 400m course or track. This is a ruthless smoker. You’ll curse me for this.

Put the bag up overhead, waiter’s carry style and start walking, counting each step. Every tenth step, drop the bag down from overhead and perform a sandbag burpee. Get the bag up overhead and get back on the move.

This one’s all about time. Set a record, and just beat it, beat it.
#48 The “Gladiator-Maker” x 25

This one is a hybrid of the Gladiator Pushup and the Manmaker. These are legendarily brutal around here.

Execution is not as complex as it seems. Hold two dumbbells (you’re going to need to take it easy on the weights on these, trust me), assume the pushup position, hands on the bells. Perform a row with the left arm as in the manmaker, then return the bell to the floor and perform a good pushup. After the pushup, turn to the side and extend the left bell up towards the sky as shown as in the Gladiator pushup. Replace the bell to the floor, bust out another pushup and then repeat the process with the right side (note: each rep will contain a total of three pushups). After you have completed the right side and replaced the bell to the starting position, jump your feet up, clean the bells to your shoulders, and press them overhead. That makes one repetition.

Tough it out through twenty five and call it a day. Gradually move to heavier bells when you can knock this one out in a few minutes.
#49 5 Dive Bombers/ 10 Mountain Climbers/ 5 Burpees

x 7 sets

Hit the deck and complete 5 dive number pushups (as shown below). Once you’re done, knock out 10 mountain climbers, counting one left plus one right as one single repetition. Upon finishing the last mountain climber, hit 5 burpees to complete the set.

7 of these bad boys, in a hurry is the task for today. Rip through them; just be sure to make the movements solid (particularly the dive bombers, don’t skimp on these when the going gets tough).

Just a word of warning, don’t do this one on a full stomach.

#50 The Sandbag Suicide Shuttle

Set up two markers, one at 20 yards, and one at 40 yards. Begin holding the sandbag at the starting line. Sprint to the 20yd marker and back, drop the sandbag off and sprint out to the 40yd marker and back. That completes one trip. Rest for 30 seconds to a minute and go again. Like the 100m repeat, this one is built up over time. Begin with 4 trips or so if your conditioning is not phenomenal. Build up to 8-10 trips over time, and track your progress in speed as well.

This is no joke.
Appendix A: How to Make a Sandbag

This Sandbag recipe is near and dear to me. When I started my business, these are what we used, seriously, these were all we had. Luckily things picked up over time and we have been able to add some tools since (earmuffs). Despite all of the wonderful new additions however, these sandbags remain great conditioning tools in our arsenal and are frequently used here by clients and made at home for their “homework”. They will only cost you a few dollars to make and maintenance is too easy. When they get beat up, just drop them in another bag and wrap them with more tape. You’ve got nothing invested here, and they will more than pay for themselves in their positive effects on your training.

Step 1: Buy the Necessary Materials

You will need:

Contractor Bags

A 50 or 80lb bag of gravel or play sand (gravel is less messy).
Duct tape.

Step 2: Put the Bag of Gravel in a Contractor Bag
Step 3: Wrap the Bag of Gravel up in the Contractor Bag

Step 4: Wrap the Hell out of it with Duct Tape to Complete Your Sandbag
The Finished Product in Use.
